Last Civic Center Structure to Be Completed

Civil Courts Building Is Final Task
By JAMES R. HILDE
The venerable "building with a past" in New Orleans' new Civic Center is expected to be completed and occupied this year.
It is the new Civil Courts building, which is nearing completion, will be a landmark which will grace the street scene of the civic district court. The Juvenile court, the first and oldest and most historic of the city's court houses, has been completed and is in use.

COMPLEX OF BUILDINGS OCCUPIES WHAT

The new court building occupies what was once the Municipal Market, a place of business for the city's storied history. The market was established in 1832 and was the center of trade and commerce for the city. The market was decommissioned in the mid-20th century and the site was then turned over to the city for use as a civic center.

In the early 1990s, plans for the new court building were approved by the city. The building was designed by the architectural firm of HNTB, and construction began in 1992. The building was completed in 1994 and is now in use.

New Orleans' new Civic Center is expected to be completed and occupied this year.

The new Civic Center is a complex of buildings that will house the city's civic and judicial functions. The center will include a new Civil Courts building, a new Juvenile court building, and a new Municipal Market.

The new Civil Courts building is a large, modern structure that is designed to meet the needs of the city's court system. The building is equipped with the latest technology and is designed to be energy-efficient.

The new Juvenile court building is a smaller, more intimate structure that is designed to provide a comfortable environment for the children who use the court.

The Municipal Market is a large, open space that is designed to be a gathering place for the community.

The Civic Center is an important part of the city's civic center and is expected to be completed and occupied this year.
